The 4 Steps to Creating a Digital Communication Step 1: Research If your message will be similar to another, your job is already done. If your message is different, you need to go deeper in order to find the best solution. In order to create a digital communication, the sender must have done his research. Once he's found the correct keywords and messages in order to convey the correct message, he can use an editor to make his work look more professional. Think of the message as a story and yourself as a writer. To make the best story, you must know what the story is about. You need to understand the main idea and who your character is (the other person). The message is often one or a combination of the following: a call to action a warning a question a recommendation a description a proposal a discount an offer an affirmation an instruction There are many ways of creating digital communications: 1. Creative writing In this approach, the writer writes sentences and paragraphs using proper diction and grammar. A message is a collection of these sentences and paragraphs. For example, this is what a common motivational sentence looks like: Choose life. This is what an informational sentence looks like: The life expectancy of long-living people is longer than it was 50 years ago. 2. A plea of no contest has been entered into evidence for a second time in Hennepin County District Court against a woman accused of stabbing her boyfriend multiple times. Mykolas Varnas, 19, of Hopkins, was found dead on July 9, 2011, of stab wounds on his torso, both arms and right side of his back. A medical examiner ruled the cause of death was multiple sharp-force injuries and ruled the manner of death a homicide. Varnas was found in his home by his roommate. A friend knocked on the door of Varnas' Southdale apartment, and when no one answered, the roommate then checked the back door and saw Varnas' lifeless body wrapped in a sheet. At a pretrial hearing, the Hennepin County attorney's office argued that it was improbable that the sister-in-law of Varnas' roommate, Mykola Demetras, staged the scene, and that her lying to police at the scene was indicative of her involvement. Citing the need to protect her child, Demetras gave a false statement to police. She said she was home alone with her two children when she heard the doorbell ring three times. She then answered the door and saw Varnas, who she met for the first time that night. Varnas asked Demetras to call 911 for him. The report of an officer who responded to the scene said Demetras told her son to hide behind the shower curtain while she told police Varnas had never called her before and that he asked her to call 911. Varnas was stabbed multiple times, and when police arrived, he was lying with his hands wrapped around his stomach. Before an assistant Hennepin County attorney said that the plea of no contest was entered, Judge Robert Scheibner asked a woman at the back of the courtroom if she is Varnas' sister-in-law. She said no. The attorney went on to say that the plea of no contest was entered on Varnas' behalf by the woman's husband. "Is it accurate, that you're actually the sister-in-law of Mykola Varnas?" the judge asked. "I am," she said. "Even though you were the one who told police that you didn't know him?" he asked. "Yes," she said.
